

CLIMATE ZONES

The hardiness of a plant is mainly determined by the minimum temperature it can be exposed to. A plant classified in zone C can grow without problems in zones A and B, but probably cannot survive in zones D and E. This climate map provides purely indicative values; other factors may also influence the hardiness of plants.